Sikles Trekking

Duration: 6 Days

Itinerary (Plan)

Day 1 Arrival in Pokhara

- Time : Full Day
- Max Altitude : 827m

Accommodation: Hotel

Meal: BLD

You'll arrive in Pokhara, have dinner, and stay there for the night. Pokhara is such a beautiful city after all, and going there a day before the trek feels like the most perfect start. The vibe of Pokhara already makes you feel magical. Like the mountains, so beautiful!

Day 2 Drive to Khudi and Trek to Bhachok

- Time : 8-10 Hours
- Max Altitude : 1,530m

Accommodation: Hotel

Meal: BLD

The day begins early in the morning. The drive to Khudi takes about six hours. On the way, you'll pass many green hills, villages, rivers, and fields. After a while, the smooth road ends and it becomes bumpy. That's when the real adventure starts. You'll even spot a jhulunge pool (a suspension bridge) and stop to take a few photos. After reaching Khudi, the walk towards Bhachok begins. Yup, the trek officially begins here. There's a mix of excitement and nervousness. The "what if I can't do it" feeling kicks in but is quickly replaced with "of course I can." The trail stays super quiet. You'll walk through forests and narrow paths, cross tiny rivers, and pass a few scattered houses along the way. After walking for 3 to 4 hours and thinking "omg my legs," Bhachok finally comes into view. It's peaceful, the vibes are calm, and the people are genuinely sweet. Spending the night here feels like a warm little break after a long walk.

Day 3 Trek to Sikles

- Time : 5-6 Hours
- Max Altitude : 1,981m

Accommodation: Hotel/Cottage

Meal: BLD

Another early start. After a good night's sleep, the tiredness feels completely gone. You'll feel fresh and ready for the journey. Treks feel way better than hikes. With hikes, you have to walk for hours and still return the same day, which doesn't leave much time to actually enjoy the views. There's this pressure to head back before it gets late. But treks are different. You walk for 5 to 6 hours and then rest somewhere. You laugh with friends or even sweet strangers you meet along the way. The vibe just hits different. The walk to Sikles takes around 5 to 6 hours. The trail goes up and down through the hills. It gets tiring and yes, you'll stop a lot too. But the views are worth it. Green forests, small animals, and glimpses of mountains along the way make it beautiful. When you reach Sikles , it feels like a dream. The village has stone houses, colorful flags between trees and rooftops, and people who smile when they see you. You'll talk to locals, rest, and just take in the view. The mountains look amazing from there. Staying overnight in Sikles will leave your heart full. Just from seeing the mountains alone.

Day 4 Explore Sikles Village

- Time : Full Day
- Max Altitude : 1,981m

Accommodation: Hotel/Cottage

Meal: Full Board

This day is all about walking around the village. Sikles is a Gurung village, and the people here speak their own language and follow their own culture. You'll see women knitting and going about their daily lives. Even if they aren't very fluent in Nepali, they'll still talk to you kindly and respectfully. So nice. So sweet. The village is clean and quiet. You'll click lots of photos and probably get lost just staring at the mountains. From different spots, you'll get views of Annapurna, Machhapuchhre, and Lamjung Himal. In the evening, it might get chilly. You'll sit by the fire, drink tea, and spend time with the family. It feels peaceful. It feels special.

Day 5 Trek to Ghachok

- Time : 5-6 Hours
- Max Altitude : 1,253m

Accommodation: Hotel/Cottage

Meal: BLD

After waking up and having breakfast in Sikles, it's time to pack up and walk towards Ghachok. The journey takes about 5 to 6 hours. The trail goes through small hills and farms. You'll see goats, chickens, and lots of people working in the fields. Ghachok is smaller than Sikles, but still just as beautiful. The people here are friendly too. After all that walking, reaching here feels like a reward. A good place to rest. You'll spend the night here.

Day 6 Drive Back to Pokhara

- Time : Full Day
- Max Altitude : 827m

Accommodation: Hotel

Meal: BLD

The final day. You wake up knowing the trek is almost over. Even though your legs are sore and you're kind of tired, no one really wants to leave. But still, you pack up, tie your shoes one last time, and start walking back. Going down is way easier than climbing up. On the way up, you were probably questioning life, breathing like you just ran a marathon. But now? It's actually fun. You'll be moving faster, laughing, and finally able to look around and enjoy the view without gasping for air every two seconds. The same path feels a little different now. Maybe because you're walking with memories. The corners where you took breaks. That one rock where someone almost tripped. You'll feel the whole journey replaying. Once you finish the trek, you'll hop into a jeep and begin the drive back to Pokhara. The road is still bumpy, still full of twists. But this time, it feels different. Slowly, the hills start to fade and smooth roads return. Pokhara comes into view again. The city feels busy. Cars. People. Lights. Noise. But even in the middle of that, your heart will still be somewhere in those peaceful hills. That life was so simple. So quiet. Waking up with the sun, walking all day, chilling by the fire at night. Somehow, that felt more real than anything. Like the only goal was to walk in the hills, eat, and just truly live rather than just exist. And the weirdest part? You start missing it right away.
